THE ETHICAL CHURCH

(Founded 1892)

QUEEN'S ROAD, LONDON, W.2

HAVING notified the Committee of the Ethical Church that I wish to retire at an early date from my forty years' leadership, I have been authorized to invite applications (preferably from candidates between the ages of 28 and 35) for the office of minister.

The Ethical Church stands in the forefront of a great and ancient tradition. Its Sunday Services and its rites of baptism, confirmation, marriage, and burial are attempts to give concrete form, not to "humanism" or personal theism, but to Ethical Realism—the spiritual truth, first discovered by Plato, that the sanctity and authority of moral values emanate neither from Man nor from a Governor of the universe, but from the inherent worth of the values themselves; that the Good itself is therefore the All-Holy Reality—the Power which must dominate our politics, economics, and private life, else we perish. This spiritual teaching is to-day gaining favour among earnest students.

Many a young man who at first intended to become a preacher in some one of the older denominations finds, after studying ethics, the history of philosophy and modern science, that it is henceforth morally impossible for him to submit to the trammels of theological tradition. Among such men, some still desire to devote their lives to the office of religious teacher and adviser; and of these it is probable that not a few would welcome a career such as the Ethical Church offers.

Candidates should, of course, first make sure that they are in active sympathy with its aims and methods. The values and principles which have guided me in formulating its Services are best set forth in Nicolai Hartmann's Ethics (Messrs. George Allen & Unwin, 1932). Social Worship (1913) contains the canticles, responses, hymns and anthems, introductory and dismissory sentences, meditations and lessons used by the Church. Its attitude towards the organized religions of the past I have tried to set forth in my two volumes entitled National Idealism and a State Church (1907) and National Idealism and the Book of Common Prayer (1908).

A minimum stipend of £400 per annum is guaranteed for the new minister. Intending candidates who desire further information should address the Hon. Secretary, The Ethical Church, Queen's Road, London, W.2.
